

State Licensure

Each state has their own licensure requirements separate from Dallas Institute of Funeral Service’s (DIFS) graduation requirements. DIFS’s national accreditation with the American Board of Funeral Service Education (ABFSE) allows a student to sit for the National Board Examination (NBE) in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. However, some states may require additional education and/or specific college courses be taken prior to issuing a license. It is recommended that students review their state licensure requirements prior to and/or during their enrollment at DIFS. All students should reach out to an academic advisor with questions about licensure so they may be directed to the proper person to assist them.

The information provided below denotes whether DIFS’s programs meet the funeral service education requirements for each state. It is not intended to indicate that our programs meet all the requirements for licensure. The first column (AAS) indicates whether this degree from DIFS meets the funeral service education requirements for a combined funeral director/embalmer license in the listed state. An asterisk indicates that there may be additional education requirements. The last column concerns Funeral Director Only license educational requirements. The name of each state is a link to where you may find the laws/rules/regulations for licensure for that state. It is recommended that you check with your state funeral service licensing board as regulations change frequently.
